run file there that you can run from rxvt (gnome-terminal works too)... A: In the case of OpenBSD, there's an updated version of Linout - - that performs both encoding and decoding for H.264 and other various flavors of H.264. It's the newest version and probably what most people would consider the "gold standard" of H.264 implementations. Linout has a very similar interface to ffmpeg - it's command line based. However, there is also a GUI front end for Linout that runs on Windows, Mac and Linux. The GUI front end supports H.264 and other various flavors of H.264. ffmpeg is actually more feature rich than Linout. Linout is basically the "basic" version that you would use in a "typical" live stream that doesn't need a lot of tweaking. It's easier to use and is more feature limited than ffmpeg. The Linout gui front end has a lot more features and allows you to tweak things to your liking. Linout also supports much more features than ffmpeg. You can find the Linout GUI here - Linout is actually used by YouTube to encode the "LIVE" streams that you see in the streams you stream to. You can see a list of stream types in the Linout settings page here - C.J. Ah You C.J. Ah You, born Changgeng Zhiyun (), is a Chinese-born Malaysian Chinese boxer. He is the former WBC Asian featherweight champion. He was scheduled to fight Kompayak Porpramook on March 9, 2012, at the 15th Malaysian National Games, in the United States but withdrew due to a hand injury. In April 2015, he won the WBC Asian Boxing Council featherweight title by defeating Filipino boxer Edward Ponce de Leon in Waseem Ali Stadium, Tangerang, Indonesia. In his first defense of the title, he defeated Filipino boxer Raymundo Mendoza in the box office draw match at the Mersing Sports Complex, Mersing, Johor, Malaysia.
